

Julia's Jottings (May, 2021)

Monday: No glass slippers but a dazzling, crystal-clear glass teapot so blended Whittard's orange Peoke and Co-op 99 blends...ahhh...sublime...strange never could get chemistry in school but clearly with age comes wisdom.

Tuesday: Here we go again Spring cleaning. A very positive start I feel, washed both the front and back doors, definitely a whiter than white 'persil' effect - very satisfying.

Wednesday: So proud, hubby made MA leader. Timothy chap 6 v 12.

N.B I'm still a B.A, ah well as my brother said all those years ago, shame I got the letters in the wrong order - the boy had a point.

Thursday: Undecided about continuing the traditional seasonal clean - rain overnight and this morning- physical change can be reversed- question is can I be bothered to implement that process or make weathering a chemical change? Oh how a little knowledge can indeed be a dangerous thing.

Thursday: Indulged in Spring sunshine and decided to take tea outside (well cup of), sat on garden bench only to find it collapse under my weight-oops - rotten wood or not confirmed my decision to continue with domestic cleansing if only to burn a few calories.

Friday: Haven't purchased a power washer, used soapy water and old-fashioned yard brush to clean path. Yep feel smug, must have burned many, many calories - what with scrubbing and extracting 4 garden waste bags of weeds as Proverbs says, "Your education is your life" - so that explains why I opted for physics and not chemistry - my exercise will be repeated irrespective of whether regulations allow gyms to open!!

Saturday: Do feel my heart is not in this, after an hour 'decluttering' all I discarded was wedding dress from 28 years ago (did keep the buttons, feel sure they may be useful) and an old puzzle book. Hey-ho it's a start.
